With the new version of AdSense, Google has changed virtually everything about the interface and added some new features. The navigation structure has been completely overhauled, as have the available types of ads. Google has reorganized the former AdSense Channels into five basic types of ads: Content, Domains, Feeds, Mobile Content, and Search. In addition, Google has tied in-game and YouTube advertising into AdSense, to make it easier to place ads in online games and YouTube videos. Google also has made it easier and more prominent to enable ad blocking — that is, to keep certain types of ads or ads from certain advertisers from appearing on your website. Google has also beefed up its AdSense reporting system, increasing the types of reports available and adding a new Overview page that displays key information in a single snapshot. While the new interface is a step forward for managing an AdSense account, existing AdSense users may find it strange and confusing—and have trouble finding out how to do what they're used to doing. That's where this Quick Guide comes in. Get up to speed quickly and easily. Then get back to making money.

You've heard of Google. Anyone who hasn't heard of Google has been living under a rock for several years now. But did you know that Google can help you do more than just find information? Google can help you increase the bottom line of your business. There are two ways that Google helps business owners increase their bottom line - with Google AdWords, and Google AdSense. There are two separate advertising programs that actually work together, even if you are only participating in one of the programs. Both programs are free to join. Google AdWords is an advertising Pay-Per-Click program. You set up a free account, write your add, choose your keywords, set your budget, and activate the campaign. Google then displays your ad in their search engine results, when your keywords are used in a search, as well as on content websites that are related to your keywords. Each time someone clicks on your ad, you are charged whatever you have agreed to pay for each click, or less in some cases. Google charges your credit card for the clicks that you have received on a regular basis. This is one of the most effective ways to get traffic to your website, and to build up an opt-in list – if you are using a capture page – in existence. On the other side of the G-Factor is Google AdSense. Google AdSense doesn't cost money – it pays money to content website owners who place the Google AdSense code on their websites, each time one of their visitors clicks on one of the ads that are displayed. With Google AdSense, you can select the type of ads that you wish to run, as well as the look and feel of the ads. When you place the code on your web page, Google serves ads that are relevant to the content on that page, so that the ads are highly targeted. The ads that are being served to AdSense sites are the ads that AdWords customers are running through the AdWords program, and this is how the two programs work together. So as you can see, you can either join forces with Google AdSense to earn extra revenue for your bottom line and/or use Google AdWords to get more traffic to your site, which you can then convert to more sales.

With internet penetration and speeds getting better by the day, more and more people are taking their life online. Even though the most notable adoption of the internet could be on the social media and general blogging world, there is a raising juggernaut in online shopping. As online transaction channels become more secure, merchants are leveraging this opportunity to bring goods and sometimes services to consumers who are not willing to walk around looking for a physical store. While this online retail business has been around for a while, a more lucrative option that works on the arbitrage concept lurks behind the normal retail business. Arbitrage, in its simplest form, is all about buying goods at a cheaper market and selling them at a more expensive market. With the internet making things so simple, you could implement the concept of online arbitrage and make profits off goods that need not be in your warehouse in the first place.
