In these early 20th century literary essays, Stefan Zweig offers a Central European view of the writers he believed to be the "three greatest novelists" of the 19th century: Balzac, Dickens, and Dostoevsky. In Zweig's view, Balzac set out to emulate his childhood hero Napoleon. Writing 20 hours a day, Balzac's literary ambition was "tantamount to monomania in its persistence, its intensity, and its concentration." His characters, each similarly driven by one desperate urge, were more vital to Balzac than people in his daily life. In Zweig's reading, Dickens embodied Victorian England and its "bourgeois smugness". His characters aspire to

"A few hundred pounds a year, an amiable wife, a dozen children, a well-appointed table and succulent meats to entertain their friends with, a cottage not too far from London, the windows giving a view over the green countryside, a pretty little garden, and a modicum of happiness." The ideal of middle-class respectability suffuses Dickens' fiction. Dostoevsky drew on the struggles of his own life to illuminate the contradictions of the human soul. In Zweig's view, his heroes had no desire to be citizens or ordinary human beings. While Balzac's heroes "would gladly have subjugated the world, Dostoevsky's heroes wished to transcend it." History of English Literature Grupo Editorial Norma Word Search Book For Adults Like your word search big and easy to read? These are not mere dreams and visions: these are a calling. Six people. Five mind-numbing visions. Four ancient and mysterious artifacts. Two exotic locations. And one greedy man who will stop at nothing, not even murder, to achieve his goal. Rev. Adam Bridger and his wife, Dr. Rachel Tremaine are once again in the center of an adventure not of their making. And joining them are four total strangers who, along with Rachel, have seen visions that most mortals can't imagine. They have been called on a mission that will forever change the world--if they survive.

He and his twin sisters, Marilyn and Melanie, decide to search for the father they have not seen in nearly thirty years. They want to know him and love him. A secret government agency is also looking for him. They want to kill him. This is the background for a fast paced thriller that takes place in the Boston area with added venues in New Hampshire, Vermont, and a fish camp in the Quebec wilderness. Characters in this book include Donald, a one-armed hitman, who loves Cheetos. Chuck, an aging Intelligence Director, hanging on for this last mission. Barbara, his assistant, a strikingly beautiful woman of Apache heritage, who, "In another time and place, would have been a Chiricahua warrior." Jimmy, an undocumented young Hispanic surveillance expert. The Martin brothers, IRA "soldiers" from Southie. Moreover, the quarry, Jack Vincent, a member of an elite government supported killing team, has decided to reveal his secret mission to the public. As Steve and the twins struggle to understand the strange events that have invaded their lives, the clues begin to add up, as does their jeopardy. Whom do they trust, where do they go? Their previously happy world is turned upside down with the threats they do not fully understand. This story explores the possibility of government involvement at a time of unprecedented concern for our national security. What is the role of truth? Dialogue drives a suspenseful narrative that combines with offsetting humor to tell this story. It follows Steve Cooper from The Philippine jungles, to his fitness club, to the Irish pubs of South Boston. The smart, sassy twins have encounters with the hitman, Donald, adding to the mystery as they are caught in this web of intrigue. The result - retribution. However, the question remains, who is right, who are the winners?
