Excerpt from The Heiligh and Harley Family We found Mrs. Abbot, who said that Phoebe had moved to Hancock street. So, we proceeded to that location and, after much difficulty, located the said Phoebe Loper. My cousin said on the way - John, do you believe in fortune-tellers. Why? Said I. Well, he said, before I found you I went to one and she told me I would meet a tall man who would lead me on a long chase after an old woman who could tell us about a fortune. Almost the first thing Phoebe said to me was - John, did you see that advertisement in the paper, inquiring for the heirs of Phoebe Rabjohn, to a fortune of some I said, who was Phoebe Rabjohn; why, she was my grandmother, said she. I asked her how she came to see the advertisement; why, said she, Mrs. Kohler and I had been out to the park, about last November, and on her return she picked up the item and read it to me, and Mrs. Abbot also read it. Why did you not cut it out, said I. Oh! Said she, I told her I was old and the lawyers would get it all; so, I did not bother with it. Where was it located, said I. I think it was in Holland, said she, some place that ends with a dam. Amsterdam? Said I. No, said she. Rotterdam? Yes, that's it, she said. So, I hunted up Mrs. Abbot, and she said, yes, I remember reading it to Phoebe. What paper was it in? Said I. I think it was the Ledger, said she, although it might have been the Record, because we often borrowed that paper from next door. About the Publisher

Excerpt from Youth in Harley This is Mis' Whitney's, he said. If you find it's all right, I guess Jim '11 help ye take in your trunk. Thus, sitting quiet in his wagon, he let the young man meet his landlady unannounced. Stephen's introduction to the house was easier than he had been led to expect. Mrs. Whitney herself came to the door, a portentously thin figure in a shapeless gray dress, with gray hair drawn tight across her temples in a way that accentuated the emaciation of her face. She was not lovely to look at, yet the quiet depth of her voice, when she spoke, made one forget to think her grotesque. Mr. Quaid? She said gently. The train must have been late again to-night. Your room is waiting for you. My husband will help you bring in your trunk. James! About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Find more at
